

- MusicTheory.net (The items marked as exercises are Drill and Practice, the lessons are Tutorials)
- I use this resource in order to teach and drill students on basic notation practices. This allows me to teach, drill, and assess my students skills. I greatly favor the exercise customizer. This allows me to specifically target the material I am teaching my students in their class. I use this to also assess the students' progress throughout the duration of the unit.

- YouTube is an incredible source of instructional videos. You can present these in class or assign links for students to use out of class. This resource allows for great discovery opportunities. A
- I use this resource in order to expose my students to a variety of musical genres and styles. In a digital world, exploring and discovering musical content from different areas of the world is just a click away. I focus on the quality content that is on YouTube, to show students what and how to look for material. I also create playlists that allows my students to access content in one single location, versus having students scavenging around the site.

